Wine List Introduction

Taste and Body indicator

All of our wines have been tasted and assessed as showing certain styles and character that complement our cuisine and will undoubtedly appeal to the discerning tastes of our clientele.

They are also graded from A to F (light- to full-bodied, A being very light, all the way to F for our full-bodied selection)

As with everything, however, these grades are subjective and we urge you to ask if you are unsure about a particular wine style before you choose.

Old World Whites

Here, Old World refers to wines that originate from Europe in all its guises. Whilst traditionally including countries such as France, Spain, Italy and Germany, we can now add the like of Hungary, Greece, Austria and many others to that list. Stylistically, these countries produce wines that have a good affinity with food - being less ripe and with a greater degree of acidity, which makes them the perfect accompaniment for cream- or butter-based cuisine

New World Whites

The New World covers all things non-European, with warmer climates such as Australia, California and Chile coming instantly to mind. Slightly cooler regions such as New Zealand and South Africa and you can see why these famous regions now add a diversity that enhances Fine Wine production. With the extra warmth comes a raised fruit profile along with more alcohol and body. As always, the emphasis is on bigger, richer and riper wines that retain a degree of 'fruitiness'

Old World Reds

European red wines fall into 2 categories in the main: those from cooler areas, such as Western France (Bordeaux, Loire etc) and higher altitude regions such as Rioja, Northern Italy etc. Such red wines show a less jammy fruit with balancing acidity that is more to the fore than warmer regions. Hotter climates, such as Southern France, Central Spain and southern Italy all produce red wines that have a higher degree of alcohol, fleshier, more jammy fruit and lower natural acidity

New World Reds

This is where it gets interesting! New World countries can be cool - look at New Zealand or parts of Chile and South Africa, for example. What sets the New World apart is their quest for richness and mouth-filling fruit. Whilst choosing the right grape variety is important, such hefty, full-structured wines are more the result of combining the climate with the winemakers' natural eagerness to express the grapes' potential - in addition to meeting developing markets' requirement for a 'New World' style

- | | | | | | |

| 27 | Australia | Shiraz Cabernet, Red Cliffs Estate | 2 | D | £22.50 |

| 28 | Chile | Merlot Turi Estate, Leyda Valley | 2 | D | £21.50 |
| | | A cracking rich and muscular Merlot with a lovely elegant mocha and cassis-laden finish | | | |
| 29 | South Africa | Pinotage, Drakensberg Paarl | 2 | C | £22.50 |
| | | The typical Pinotage character of spice, leather and mulberry comes through well on the finish | | | |
| 30 | Argentina | Malbec 'Lunta', Mendel, Argentina | 3 | E | £27.95 |
| | | Very rich, full-bodied Malbec from one of Argentina's top wine estates. Strongly recommended by top US wine 'Guru' Robert Parker. Opaque in colour yet dense of flavour with a smoky, peppery style | | | |
